Mr. Hasty,

I owe you an apology for the tone of some of my last emails. My intention has never been to create a firestorm or make your job more difficult than it already is.

The last few days have felt like being hit by a Mack truck, and it came across in my tone, and you are absolutely not the right person to have been on the receiving end of that. I sincerely apologize.

Being brand new to all of this, I do have lots of questions, so I want to keep the lines of communication open as your insight and experience is invaluable to me. And I hope you can accept my apology.

Sincerely,

Terri Cunningham–Swanson
